Many changes are occurring within the Law School and every effort is being made to report on these changes. There are, however, a great many other developments, both within and without the Law School, that are of interest to alumni, friends, faculty and students. Readers are therefore encouraged to submit items of general interest, of either news or commentary value, for publication.

Construction Begins on Law Building Addition

Construction of new addition to the College of Law building.

Throughout its history, the College of Law has constantly strived to meet the needs of its students and faculty. From its humble two-room beginning, the school has grown year after year and has once again found it necessary to expand its quarters.

If you haven't driven down Limestone Street lately, you will be surprised to find a large addition on the southern part of the College of Law.

The addition, which will contain needed library space and some additional classroom and office space, is scheduled for completion in August 1979, said College of Law Dean Thomas Lewis.

Constructed at a cost of more than $1.75 million, the addition will add about 25,200 gross square feet to the law building, Lewis said.

About 12,000 square feet will be used for additional library space, which will increase the library's size by approximately one-third.

The rest of the space will provide a net gain of one classroom and one seminar room, said Assistant Dean Paul Van Booven. Of the more than 25,000 additional gross square feet, about 17,000 square feet will be usable.

"The impetus for the addition was simply a need for more library space for shelving and studying. In addition, we do need more faculty and student office and living space, and the new portion of the building will provide that also," Van Booven said.

Foster and Creighton Company, of Lexington, is the general contractor for the job, and McLoney and Associates, also of Lexington, are the architects.

The project began when a law school committee was appointed in March 1975 to study the problem of needed additional space, Van Booven said. Money for construction was appropriated in October 1975.

However, bids on the building came in higher than the budgeted amount, Dean Lewis said, "and it is still possible we could have inadequate funds to furnish and equip the addition, and we may need some extra help."

Whether there will be any interruption in law school classes, Van Booven said, it is difficult to determine. He said he received complaints from a small number of students who said they were bothered with jackhammer noise during spring semester finals.

"But so far, the construction company has been quite cooperative in adjusting to our needs," Van Booven said.

Law School History

By Linda Carnes

Seventy years ago 28 students began studying law at the University of Kentucky in two small rooms. Today, the College of Law is expanding its building to hold classes for 480 students and to provide a library with more than 154,000 volumes.

During its 70-year span, the College has been housed in five different buildings on the UK campus.

It all began when Judge William Thornton Lafferty, of Cynthiana, organized the College of Law under the provisions of an act of the state legislature in 1908.

In an article written for the January 1923 Kentucky Law Journal, Judge Lafferty explained the founding of the College. He stated that he was asked to organize the College of Law and serve as Comptroller of the University. He agreed to undertake the work as an experiment for one year.

"For the first year, beginning July 1, 1908, I traveled each day on the L & N Railroad back and forth between Lexington and my home in Cynthiana," Judge Lafferty wrote.

"In the organization of the College of Law I was given a free hand by the Board of Trustees, except as to the amount of money I was allowed to spend, which was by force of circumstances, very limited," he said.

The law school opened in September 1908 with a matriculation of 28 students in two small rooms in the Education Building (now Frazee Hall).

According to Judge Lafferty's article, there were five other law schools in the state at that time, "each of which provided only a two-year course in law, with no particular school training for those who might attend their schools."

It was in Judge Lafferty's mind to make a law school with the requirements of the American Standard, which was a three-year course in law based on at least a four-year high school course.

The equipment during the first year consisted of a few blackboards and benches that were found in the two rooms assigned to the law school, and there were no books except textbooks used in classes and copies of the Kentucky Code and Statutes.

Judge Lafferty engaged the services of Judge Charles Kerr, of Lexington, and Thomas Edwin Moore, of Paris, each of whom agreed to devote one hour each day to the teaching of law in the new school.

The second year opened, Judge Lafferty wrote, and the number of students had increased to 40. The school still had the same faculty with a few additional law lecturers provided. The library had been increased to about 500 volumes, mainly through the gifts of persons interested in the growth of the school.

It was during the second year that the school moved to the third story of Miller Hall which had been vacated by the Mining College.

Judge Lafferty and his staff of six had much remodeling to do since the attic, which spread the width of the building, had no floors and the walls were not plastered. After renovation, the new home consisted of three classrooms, a large library, courtroom and offices for the Judge and his staff.

Judge Lyman Chalkley was added to the faculty in the third year.

Twenty-three eager students received their diplomas when the first class graduated in 1910. Soon the two-year program was lengthened to three years to meet the requirements of the Association of American Law Schools.

According to the Bulletin of the State University of Kentucky (June 1911), it was decided after one year of the two-year program, that a longer period was required for a student to acquire a knowledge of the various elements of the law which would enable him to meet the needs of the profession.

"Commencing with September 1909, the course was extended to three years, and embraces work of a collateral nature, which experience has proven to be of practical value in connection with technical instruction," according to the Bulletin.

Within four years after the organization of the school, it became a member of the Association of American Law Schools, and it has endeavored to advance steadily the ideals of legal education in the state (Bulletin, January 1926).

In 1921, the American Bar Association made certain recommendations for standard colleges of law, and in 1924 the College of Law was placed on the approved list by the American Bar Association. It was the first law school in the state to receive such certification.

The next few years passed with rapid strides being made in the improvement and success of the College. The number of students increased every year, the library grew to about 5500 volumes and several new members joined the faculty.

During the 14 years Judge Lafferty served the school as dean—until his death in 1922—he was instrumental in starting new programs at the school.

In 1911 he formed the Moot Court, modeled after actual courtroom trial procedures. The program was such a success that he was asked to address the 1911 meeting of the Association of American Law Schools to explain his new practice-approach to law education. Soon after, law schools throughout the country incorporated the program in their law curriculum.

Frazee Hall, home of the first Law School—1908 - 09

In 1912, publication of the Kentucky Law Journal was commenced. It is the 10th oldest of the law reviews published by the nation's law schools and has been published continuously since 1912.

Practice Court was set up at the College of Law in 1919.

Between 1917 and 1926 enrollment increased from 58 to 122 students. By the 1930s, 140 students attended school during the regular school year and some 50 students participated in the summer school program.

In describing the purpose of the College, the January 1926 Bulletin says: "The design of the College of Law is to train the student in the fundamental principles of English and American common law so as to equip him to practice his profession wherever that system of law prevails.

"As most of the students intend to practice in the State of Kentucky, special emphasis is placed on the decisions of that State, but only as representing the current of judicial authority or a dissent therefrom. The method used in all classes is the study of cases, the method of instruction followed in all the leading law schools of the country.

"Credit is obtained by the successful passing of written examinations at the end of each semester, and the student who successfully completes the course is awarded the degree of Bachelor of Laws."

In the fall of 1926, the College of Law moved to a building devoted entirely to the College's activities and remodeled to meet the demands of the increasing student body and general expansion and curriculum. The original Agricultural Experiment Station Building (now Administration Annex) was selected for this purpose.

Soon after the College changed its quarters, Alvin E. Evans became the new dean after Dean Charles J. Turck resigned in 1927 to become president of Centre College.

Under Dean Evans, the College of Law received great distinction when the Order of Coif, the highest ranking legal fraternity in the U.S., installed a chapter in 1931. UK was the 30th law school in the country to be granted a chapter under the charter provisions which considered law schools with "strong standards, a law library, qualified faculty, standards of admission and strictness of grading, teaching and research."

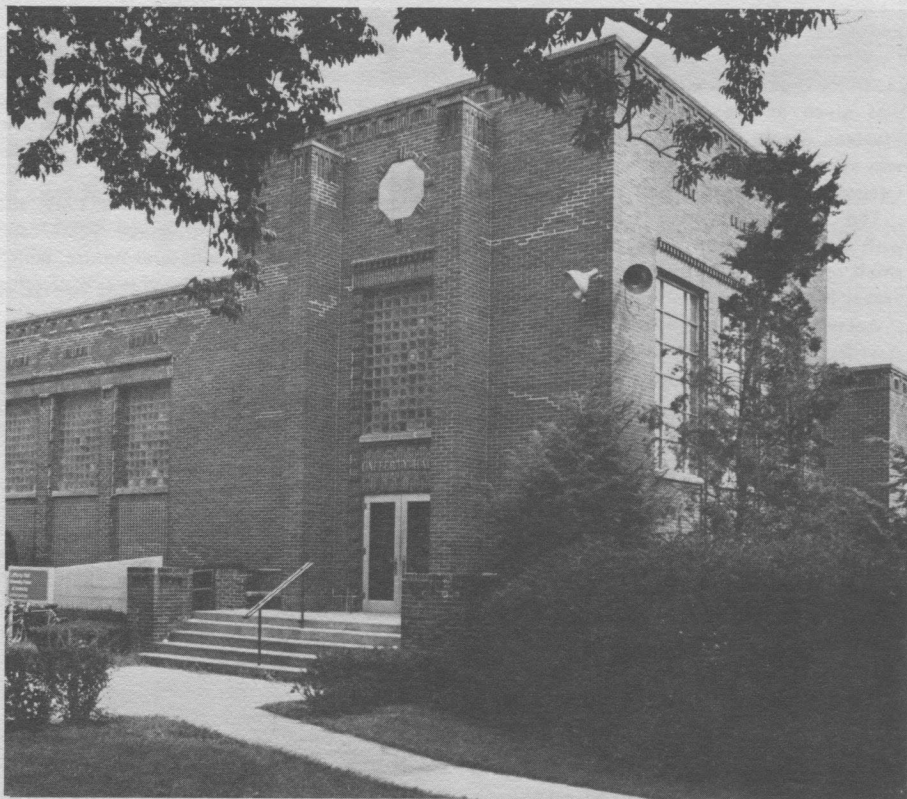

The next home of the College of Law was Lafferty Hall, the first building specifically built for the law school, where work began on Jan. 4, 1937, with the aid of WPA funds. This building now houses the University Press of Kentucky and the Anthropology Museum.

Included in the new building was an assembly room/first-year classroom in amphitheatre style with a capacity of 200 persons, a new library containing 28,000 volumes, a courtroom, lounges, faculty and student offices, and classrooms.

On March 6, 1942, Dean Evans was quoted in the Kentucky Kernel as saying "the construction of a commodious building to house Administration Annex, home of the Law School 1926 - 38.

Lafferty Hall, the first building specifically built for the law school.

law school activities marks a milestone in the life of the University of Kentucky Law School."

The College of Law remained in Lafferty Hall for 27 years under Deans Evans, Elvis J. Stahr and William Lewis Matthews, Jr.

By 1965, the College of Law had weathered more than a half-century of changes. Now in its current location—the fifth in its history—the College is once again expanding its quarters to accommodate a larger library and to add more classroom and office space.

VISITING COMMITTEE CREATED BY PRESIDENT SINGLETARY

Ten distinguished lawyers have been selected to serve on a newly formed Visiting Committee at the College of Law.

The Visiting Committee, which was created by the dean, the board of directors of the College of Law Alumni Association and the faculty, was set up to obtain helpful insights from a prominent group of lawyers, said Dean Thomas Lewis.

Committee members will visit the College of Law and become acquainted with the program so as to serve the school in an advisory fashion, Lewis said.

The members, who were nominated by alumni, faculty and the dean, were appointed by UK President Otis Singletary. Each member will serve a two-year term. Ultimately, the committee will have 15 members.

"I am very enthusiastic about the committee and am pleased with the caliber of people who have agreed to serve. My hope is that these positions will be an honor and people will want to be selected," Lewis said.

The Hon. Scott Reed, '44, spoke for the judiciary, welcoming the new graduates into the profession. By class request, Professors Willburt Ham and Frederick W. Whiteside, Jr., spoke on behalf of the faculty. Professor Whiteside, noting his coming retirement and entry into Lexington private practice, closed the day's remarks with a humorous charge to the graduates: "As you leave the penurious life of the student and become prosperous young attorneys, I leave you with two suggestions: Send your big gifts to Carroll Stevens for the College of Law Fund and your big tax cases to me."

Friday evening preceding graduation, graduating seniors and their families were treated by the faculty to a reception at Spindletop Hall on Iron Works Pike. Another short reception was held following the commencement exercises, in the Student Lounge of the Law Building.

KENTUCKY LAW JOURNAL

This year's editors of the Kentucky Law Journal have a new idea for the yearly edition of the Kentucky Law Survey.

Instead of the articles being the total product of faculty members, the survey will be jointly authored by faculty and students.

The main objective, according to Drake Cutini, editor-in-chief, is to give students an opportunity to publish and a chance to do scholarly research.

"We think the faculty members have done an excellent job in writing the articles in the past, but at the same time we want to give more students a chance to research and write articles," Cutini said.

"During the '60s the survey was completely done by students. We don't want to go completely back to that because we like using the expertise of the faculty, but we want to let students have more of a hand in it," he said.

The Kentucky Law Survey, published once a year, is used extensively by practitioners in the state since its articles contain an overview and analysis of what has happened in various areas of the law during the past year.

The Survey covers the term of the court, July 1-June 30. Exactly what areas will be covered by this year's survey have not been determined, Cutini said.

This year's law journal editors, selected by the outgoing editors, began their term of office February 1. There are 40 students, including the editors, on this year's staff.

Cutini said some other minor changes will be made in the operation of the journal, but added that they will be primarily administrative.

The Kentucky Law Journal, the 10th oldest law journal in the country, has been published continuously since 1912.

Four issues are published annually, and each issue contains articles written by prominent scholars in legal and related fields and notes and comments written by Journal members.

SWINFORD LECTURE SERIES

Archibald Cox, professor at Harvard Law School and former Watergate special prosecutor, will be the first guest in the Judge Mac

Swinford Lecture Series to begin at the College of Law this fall.

The date has not been confirmed, but October 19 has been tentatively set for Professor Cox's lecture, said College of Law Assistant Dean Paul Van Booven.

Announcements will be made and invitations will be sent to members of the Kentucky Bar Association when the time and location of the lecture are determined.

Sponsored jointly by the UK College of Law and the Kentucky Bar Association, the lecture series will be held biannually. The theme for all the lectures will be "professional responsibility," said Dean Thomas Lewis.

The lecture series is named in honor of the late Judge Mac Swinford who was U.S. District Court Judge for the Eastern and Western Districts of Kentucky beginning September 11, 1937.

Judge Swinford, who was born in Cynthiana December 23, 1899, was U.S. District Attorney for the Eastern District of Kentucky from 1933 to 1937.

He was also a member of the Kentucky House of Representatives, 1926-29, and the Judicial Conference of the U.S. from 1966-69.

Judge Swinford received his LL.B. from the University of Virginia and his LL.D. from Salmon P. Chase Law School. He was admitted to the Kentucky Bar in 1922 and practiced at Cynthiana. He died Feb. 3, 1975.

"The lecture series will hopefully attract those persons who are most outstanding in the profession," Lewis said.

Archibald Cox was selected as the first lecturer because of his vast experience and knowledge in the field of law.

Cox's most noteworthy achievements include: solicitor-general of the U.S., 1961-65; professor of law at Harvard Law School, 1945-19—; Carl M. Loeb University professor; special prosecutor, Watergate, 1973; chairman, Governors' Commission on Judicial Needs, 1978-19—; board of overseers, Harvard, 1962-65; U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, 1937-38; law clerk for Judge Learned Hand.

Professor Cox received his A.B. degree from Harvard in 1934, his LL.B. in 1937, and an LL.D. degree in 1975. He was admitted to the Massachusetts Bar in 1937 and the U.S. Supreme Court Bar in 1942.

NATIONAL MOOT COURT

A six-person National Moot Court Team, selected from about 60 second-year students last spring, will soon be preparing their arguments for the regional competition.

Members of the 1978-79 team are: Jon

Ohlman, Louisville; Mike McCowen, Carterville, Ill.; Sara Donaldson, Eminence; Cindy Cecil, Louisville; Darlene Ross, Ashland; and Debbie Poore, Hodgenville.

The national team is selected through a competitive elimination process beginning in the fall of the second year.

From the 60 students who competed, 24 were chosen for the Moot Court Board, said Assistant Dean Paul Van Booven. The 24-person board is then reduced to eight students and finally six are selected.

The topic for the regional and national competition has not yet been chosen.

FAYETTE BAR HONORS RETIREES

Just before the 1978 Spring semester ended, the Student Bar Association joined with the Fayette County Bar Association to sponsor a champagne reception for College of Law retirees Prof. Fred W. Whiteside, Jr. and Circulation Librarian Thelma Rogers. More than 200 students and members of the Bar attended the affair, held at the Helen G. King Alumni House on the University campus.

During the festivities, several Annual Student Awards were announced. Named recipient of the Roy F. Moreland Award for Outstanding Service to the SBA was Tim O'Neill, a graduating senior from Louisville who is soon to become clerk to Federal Judge James F. Gordon. The SBA Committee Member of the Year went to Amy Garon, a second-year student also from Louisville. The winner of the Best Student Writing Award, sponsored by the Kentucky Law Journal, was Donna Chu. Ron Mather, a native of Hodgenville, was named recipient of the McEwen Award for Best Oral Advocate, presented annually by the Moot Court Board. The Best Performance in the Libel Show Award went aptly enough to Mike Herrington, a member of the Class of 1978, for his rendition of "Fast Freddie Whiteside."

Professors Carolyn Bratt and Robert G. Schwemm were named Outstanding Professors of the Year.

Faculty Notes

NEW FACULTY

Four new faculty members have been hired by the College of Law and will begin their teaching duties this fall.

The hiring of the new faculty members will enable the school to divide the first-year class into three sections, said College of Law Dean Thomas Lewis. Last year's first-year class was divided into three sections for Constitutional Law and Criminal Law, but the other classes were divided only into two sections.

Dean Lewis said he is pleased the change can be made since smaller classes are preferable to both students and faculty.

The following is a short biographical sketch of each of the new faculty members:

Mary Louise Everett Graham was born in 1943 and is presently living in Austin, Tx. She received a B.A. degree with honors from the University of Texas and a J.D. degree with high honors from the University of Texas Law School.

While a law student, Ms. Graham was associate editor of the Texas Law Review. Her other honors include: Order of the Coif, Chancellors (honor society based on grades), Outstanding Mid-Law Student, and Outstanding Procedure Student Award.

Her most recent employment was as law clerk for the Hon. Homer Thornberry, U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. In addition, she served as research assistant for Prof. George Dix, 1976-77, at the University of Texas Law School.

Ms. Graham is the author of a case note, 54 Texas L. Rev. 652 (1976).

She is teaching in the commercial law area, Lewis said.

John Marshall Rogers, 30, is living in Washington, D.C., and since August 1974 has worked as a trial attorney, appellate section, civil division, for the U.S. Department of Justice.

His work for the department of justice involves preparation of briefs and presentation of oral argument in the U.S. Courts of Appeals on behalf of federal agencies such as Health, Education and Welfare, Defense, Agriculture, and the Coast Guard. Additional responsibilities include preparation of draft Supreme Court briefs and memoranda.

Other legal experience includes a position as legal intern in the Office of the Legal Adviser, U.S. Department of State, during the summer of 1973.

Rogers, a graduate of Ft. Knox High School in Ft. Knox, Ky., received his B.A. from Stanford University in 1970, where he majored in history. He was selected as a member of Phi Beta Kappa in his junior year and graduated with distinction. He was active in the Young Republicans' organization, did editorial work on several campus publications and attended Stanford-in-Austria in Vienna.

Rogers attended the University of Michigan Law School and was awarded his J.D. degree magna cum laude in 1974. While a law student, his honors and activities included election to the Order of the Coif, and he was on the staff of the Michigan Law Review.

He is a member of the District of Columbia Bar and the bars of seven United States Courts of Appeals.

According to Dean Lewis, Rogers is teaching in the torts and international law areas.

Eugene R. Gaetke, born in 1948, is from St. Paul, Minnesota. He was recently under contract with the state of Minnesota as administrative hearing examiner in the Office of Hearing Examiners, in St. Paul.

Other law-related employment includes: special assistant to the attorney general in the Office of the Attorney General, in St. Paul (1975-77), assistant county attorney, Cook County, Grand Marais, Minnesota, (1974-75), and private practice, Swanson & Gaetke, attorneys-at-law, Grand Marais, Minn., (1974-75).

Gaetke received his B.A., summa cum laude, from the University of Minnesota in 1971, with his major in political science and a minor in economics. He obtained his J.D. degree, magna cum laude, from the University of Minnesota Law School in 1974. He declined an invitation to be on the Law Journal, and instead compiled a study of all private environmental litigation in Minnesota.

Other law school honors include: Harvey T. Reid Minnesota Law Scholarship winner, Minnesota Public Law intern, and was on the Dean's List with an A average for all three years of law school.

His bar admissions are: State of Minnesota (September, 1974), Federal District Court, District of Minnesota (November, 1975), and 8th U.S. Circuit Court (October, 1976).

Gaetke is teaching contracts, environmental law and land use planning, Lewis said.

Gerald P. Johnston, born in 1937, was recently a partner in Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue in Washington, D.C. Previous to 1969, he was an associate with that firm for six years. From 1962-63 Johnston was an associate with O'Melveny & Myers, in Los Angeles, Calif.

While at Jones, Day, his practice included substantial work in wills, trusts and estates; estate planning; commercial litigation—including civil, arbitration and government contract matters, at the trial and appellate levels; and administration law.

He was also chairman of Jones, Day's Recruiting Committee from 1973-77, during which time the firm hired 31 new associates and 40 summer clerks.

In addition, from 1972-75, he was an Assigning Partner who was responsible for the work assignments and supervision of the firm's associates.

Johnston received a B.A. from Wesleyan University in 1959 and an LL.B. from Duke University in 1962. While a law student he was case note editor for the Duke Law Journal. His law school honors include: Order of the Coif and secretary of Student Government. As an undergraduate, he was selected Phi Beta Kappa and received honors and distinction in history.

His publications include two notes published in the Duke Law Journal while in law school: Winter 1961, "Inconsistent Verdicts in Criminal Law"; Fall 1961, "Group Boycotts as Per Se Violations of the Antitrust Laws."

Johnston is teaching in the property, trusts and estates and state gift tax fields, Dean Lewis said.

FACULTY REPORT

Professor William L. Matthews Jr., former dean of the UK College of Law, was the recent recipient of two awards.

Professor Matthews was one of six UK faculty members to receive the Great Teacher Award. Selection for the $500 award is made by the Alumni Association Board of Directors from nominations by students.

In his nomination for Great Teacher Award, Matthews was commended for making a conscious effort to be available to students after class for further discussion, by keeping long office hours, and by showing a sincere interest in the conversation at hand.

At the Fayette County Bar Association's annual dinner this summer, Matthews received the Henry T. Duncan Award.

The award, which is given to a local lawyer "whose integrity, leadership and professional conduct serve to exemplify the high ethical and professional standards which benefit the community," is in honor of the late Henry T. Duncan, a Lexington lawyer.

Matthews was presented the award in recognition of his distinguished career as a legal educator, his continuing efforts in promoting a law school curriculum which would best prepare law graduates to serve the public, and for his efforts in assisting individual students of all scholastic levels.

He has been a member of the College of Law faculty since 1947 and was dean of the school from 1957 to 1971. Matthews is a graduate of Western Kentucky University and the UK College of Law. He has a master's degree and a doctor of juridical science from the University of Michigan.

Elvis J. Stahr, former Secretary of the Army and dean of the UK College of Law, 1948-51, recently submitted his resignation as president and chief executive officer of the National Audubon Society.

Stahr made his resignation effective as soon as a successor can be found and is ready to take over.

In an article in the June 17 edition of The New York Times, Stahr noted that he is almost 63 years old, but in order to insure a smooth transition in leadership, he said he would work with the society until he is 65.

Stahr was Secretary of the Army in the Kennedy Administration. In 1968 he became president of the National Audubon Society, one of the nation's largest and oldest conservation organization with 400,000 members in 419 chapters throughout the country.

John James Cound

John James Cound, professor of law at the University of Minnesota, was a visiting professor in the College of Law this summer.

Professor Cound taught Federal Courts to about 18 students during the summer school session. He said he was impressed with the class and added that they always seemed to be well-prepared.

"I enjoy going to other schools during the summers because it's a nice opportunity to see whether things are different. It's surprising, but they rarely are. Most law schools and their students are quite similar no matter where you go," Cound said.

Cound came to Kentucky primarily because of his close friendship with Dean Lewis.

"Dean Lewis invited me and we are close friends so I decided to come. My mother lives in Louisville and it's a good chance to visit her," he said.

Many will remember Professor Cound's name since he is co-author (with Friedenthal and Miller) of the textbook, Cases on Civil Procedure (1968, 1974).

Cound noted that "It's the most widely used procedure book in the country."

Cound has been a professor in the University of Minnesota Law School since 1956. Prior to his teaching career, he was an attorney in the U.S. Department of Justice, in Washington, for three years.

Born in Dayton, Ohio, Feb. 7, 1928, he was a law clerk for Judge Learned Hand in the U.S. Court of Appeals in New York City in 1952-53.

He received his B.A. from George Washington University in 1949 and his LL.B. from Harvard in 1952.

Frederick W. Whiteside Jr.

At the end of the Spring semester Prof. Frederick W. Whiteside, Jr. brought to a close a full-time teaching career that spanned 38 years.

Professor Whiteside was graduated from the University of Arkansas in 1933 and received his LL.B. from Cornell in 1936. He began his teaching career at the University of Arkansas and Rutgers University and was an attorney with the U. S. Department of Justice. He has been at UK since 1949.

Noted for his expertise in taxation, Professor Whiteside will now enter an 'of counsel' arrangement with a Lexington law firm, Smith & Bowling.

Remarks Honoring Professor Frederick W. Whiteside Jr. University of Kentucky Law Alumni Banquet Galt House, Louisville May 11, 1978

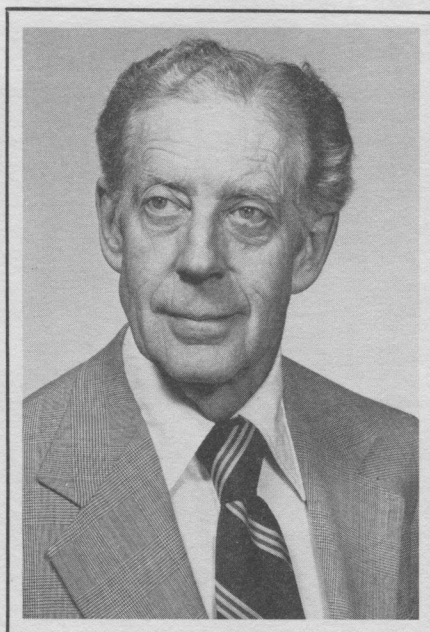

I am most pleased for this chance at this annually delightful Law Alumni Banquet to say something about the genuine regard we all extend to Fred Whiteside a few weeks before he takes retirement status at the law school.

I am sure all of you share this pleasure in the broadest sense, but also in particular different senses, depending on your relationship with him since he came to the law school in 1949.

In the personal sense, I have great regard for Fred and I know you do also. He is a warm, generous person who will help you if he can, on no broader ground than your need for his help.

In the colleague sense, I have strong regard and respect for Fred, and I can tell you that this regard is shared by those who have taught with him here and elsewhere over his distinguished career. He is a knowledgeable, professional colleague, as Paul Oberst, Burt Ham and I learned long ago, who understands what is important and unimportant in a legal education.

In the student and former student sense, Professor Whiteside has the special regard of all who have had that relationship to him. Never having been his student in the classroom, it may surprise you that I would presume to testify on this point except in a representational capacity. If I am disqualified, many of you could be called to testify as could other colleagues who were students under him, including Tom Lewis, Bob Lawson, Bill Fortune and Biff Campbell. But I deny my disqualification.

In many instances over the years, I have sought Fred's instruction in his special fields of expert confidence: tax law and family law. In every case I have learned much from him and he has instructed me with great skill because he knows so much, including what it is that I would be unlikely to know in his field. And in every case where I followed his instructions, I came out right. What more can one say about a man who chooses to teach as a career.

Finally, in a future or expectant sense, I would offer you a prediction that Fred Whiteside will fare well in retirement both in fact and in our regard. Whatever a retirement status is, and there is considerable doubt on that matter in modern American society, surely it is not a condition that requires one to abandon the traits of mind and personality and purpose that brought him there. And even if it were, I can't imagine Fred Whiteside abandoning any of the fine qualities that have earned him our warmest regard.

Professor of Law

Fellow alumni, distinguished guests, faculty and friends of the College of Law. This year is the 25th anniversary of my graduation from the College of Law, and I am in my 20th year of the practice of law here in Louisville where I have spent the majority of my time dealing with federal and state tax matters. I am extremely pleased to be a part of this program wherein special recognition is given to Fred Whiteside. Fred was a Professor at the College of Law when I was a student, and he taught me the basic federal tax courses. He, therefore, bears some responsibility for my determination to proceed to further training in the federal tax area and thereafter to concentrate my practice in tax matters.

I would like to take just a few moments to tell you some things about this man and what he means to me and to many other practicing lawyers who know him.

First—he is respected as a teacher. My experience has been that the lawyers in our firm who have graduated from the College of Law have had a good grasp of the fundamentals of federal taxation. This can only result from the quality of instruction they have had at the Law School. As an alumnus who recruits at U of K, I am grateful that its graduates have such background.

Second—he is a scholar. Federal tax law is an area where your education rapidly obsolesces because of the propensities of Congress to make substantial material alterations of the law almost every Congressional session. The year after I was graduated from the College of Law, Congress rewrote the entire Internal Revenue Code. Thereafter, there have been literally hundreds of changes, additions and deletions to the Code. The Code has become much longer and more complex. The sentence structure has become more convoluted. In recent years, we have found that Congress has been in such a rush to pass some particular “reform” provision that they have done a very sloppy job. Therefore, in the following year they have had to enact so-called “technical amendments acts” or “technical changes acts” to clean up the mistakes they made in the prior year. Through all of this, Fred Whiteside has constantly studied to maintain his proficiency in this discipline. In addition, he has published a number of papers and other scholarly works, making a significant contribution to the understanding of, at best, a complex subject. I repeat—he is a scholar—and in my opinion scholarship is the foundation upon which all must be built in the practice of law.

Third—he is a fine and gentle man. When graduates of the College of Law get together and reminisce, the character, idiosyncrasies and attributes of various professors are sometimes a topic of discussion. From such discussions, I can say that Fred Whiteside is universally regarded by those who know him, from their days as students or their later contacts, as a distinguished and gentle human being for whom all of us have a great fondness. We like him.

Shortly, Fred’s life will enter a new stage. Although he will teach a tax course at the College of Law this Fall because a successor has not yet been engaged, he will also become of counsel to a firm in Lexington. I know that he will be well suited for this new undertaking and that he will enjoy it. So Fred, on behalf of the alumni of the College of Law who are now in private practice, I say thank you for your many years of distinguished service to the Law School and I welcome you into a new arena. We know you will enjoy it and we are delighted to have you with us.

Thank you very much.

He holds a B.S. degree from UK in Commerce and has held numerous posts in the University Alumni Association. He was recently elected to the Kentucky Bar Association's Board of Governors from the 2nd Supreme Court District.

English, a partner in the law firm of English, Lucas, Priest & Owsley, is married to Barbara King English, a former UK student. They have three children.

ADAMS CHAIRS 1978 FUND

Charles Adams, '52, whose wife and law partner Norma, '54, is a past President of the Law Alumni Association, has been named by the 1978 College of Law Fund Steering Committee to lead this year's annual giving drive.

Charles Adams

Adams served on the 1975-76 Alumni Steering Committee that was responsible for revitalizing and incorporating the College of Law Alumni Association. He has been active in alumni affairs ever since, serving on several ad hoc committees. He was instrumental in the formulation of the first annual College of Law Fund in 1977, and served as Agent for the Class of 1952.

"I am looking forward to this year, which I think will be an important one in the development of law school's annual fund campaign. If we can just effectively organize all the many alumni who have volunteered to work in this effort, I'm sure we'll have a successful year," Adams said.

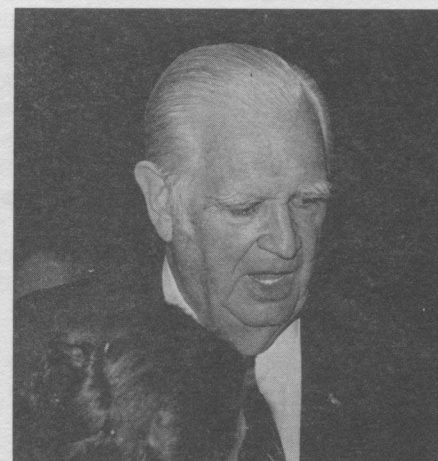

When asked what new ideas might be implemented this year, he replied, "It's clear that last year's good alumni response was due to the high incidence of personal contact. I think that's something we need to build on even more this year. I expect this year we will be appointing Area Agents throughout the state and throughout the nation where Kentucky lawyers practice. The more we can spread the word in a person-to-person manner, the more alumni we will see participating in this campaign."

Dean Thomas Lewis praised Adams' continuing interest in law school affairs: "I was delighted with Charlie's appointment. He brings to the task an enormous amount of ability and interest. As in the past, it will be a real pleasure to work with him."

Assistant Dean for College Relations Carroll Stevens will again be serving as Coordinator for this year's Fund. He noted that this year's announcement brochure has already gone to press. A mid-summer meeting of the Steering Committee has been scheduled, at which final plans will be approved and Agent nominations considered on. In addition to Adams, 1978 College of Law Fund Steering Committee members are Charles E. English, '60, Bowling Green; Frederick E. Nichols, '50, Madisonville; John G. Heyburn II, '76, Louisville; Richard Bush Jr., '39, Lexington, and Caywood Smith, '50, Harlan.
